Course overveiw

Regulatory project management is no longer administrative - it is strategic. In an environment of global submissions, accelerated pathways, evolving health authority expectations and increasing cross-functional complexity, Regulatory Affairs professionals must deliver with precision, manage risk proactively and influence stakeholders - often without direct authority.

This two-day interactive course provides structured frameworks, practical tools and leadership capability to help Regulatory Affairs and Regulatory Operations professionals deliver submissions and lifecycle projects with greater clarity, confidence and control.

Benefits of attending

By the end of the course, participants will be able to:

- Apply structured project management methodologies to regulatory submission and lifecycle activities
- Build realistic regulatory project plans, risk registers and communication strategies
- Lead cross-functional stakeholders effectively to deliver milestones on time and compliantly

Who should attend

This course is designed for professionals working in Regulatory Affairs and Regulatory Operations across pharmaceuticals, biotechnology and medical devices, including:

- Regulatory affairs associates, specialists and managers
- Regulatory project managers, coordinators and submissions leads
- Regulatory operations professionals supporting global submissions

It is suitable for both newer professionals seeking structure in managing regulatory projects and experienced managers aiming to strengthen cross-functional leadership and delivery impact.
